Abstract. Fuson (1969), see also Carlson (1975), claims that Olmecs and Maya knew and used a (lodestone) compass for the orientation of pyramids, ceremonial and other important buildings, thousand years before Chinese. This hypothesis is tested here with the aid of the new data, namely by comparison of paleomagnetic declinations for that time and area (Korte and Böhnel, 2005), with orientation data of buildings based also on our measurements at many archaeological localities of México, ...
