The Sword And Pen Poems

The pen is mightier than the sword, We have heard the poets say; The major changes man has wrought Seem to go the other way. Long years ago, with noble words, We declared our country free; The power of the sword is how Our freedom came to be. Try to remember Gettysburg, Iwo Jima, or Bataan; The answers for those did not come From a wordy magic wand.

The Pen is Mightier than The Sword by Mariska Taylor-Darko is a poem in memory of Ghanaian Poet; Kofi Awoonor. The poem honors the work of Kofi Awoonor and emphasizes the superiority of making a positive difference through writing, as opposed to solving conflict through war and bloodshed. Despite the poem being directed towards one person, there are many general lessons that can be taken out of Taylor’s writing.

British War Poets: By the Pen and the Sword. With the October issue of The Rake celebrating British military heroes now on the stands, we raise a sombre toast to the literary heroes produced by the horrors of World War I. Gathered by the side of a muddy track, British soldiers look on as a fellow comrade takes pen to paper in a brief moment of calm.
